In this book, Carrie B. Kisker illustrates how community colleges can utilize design thinking to identify and evaluate entrepreneurial opportunities, and experiment with the internal changes

"The economics of American higher education are driven by one key factor--the availability of students willing to pay tuition--and many related factors that determine what schools they attend. By digging into the data, economist Nathan Graue has created probability models for predicting college attendance. What he sees are alarming events on the horizon that every college and university needs to understand.

Overall, he spots demographic patterns that are tilting the US population toward the Hispanic southwest.

Moreover, since 2007, fertility rates have fallen by 12 percent.

Higher education analysts recognize the destabilizing potential of these trends. However, existing work fails to adjust headcounts for college attendance probabilities and makes no systematic attempt to distinguish demand by institution type. This book analyzes demand forecasts by institution type and rank, disaggregating by demographic groups. Its findings often

Geographic and racial attendance by Asians, not Hispanics, will grow most. Graue

also use the model to consider possible changes in institutional recruitment strategies and government policies. These "what if" analyses show that even aggressive innovation is unlikely to overcome trends toward larger gaps across racial, family income, and parent

How our colleges and universities can respond to the changing hopes and needs of society In recent decades, cognitive psychologists have

Prior to this century,

most psychologists

thought that creativity, traits were largely

How prepared are educators to cultivate

What do they need to the possibilities? Will college faculties

be done to hasten the process of innovation

providing answers to these questions, Bok identifies the hurdles
to institutional
change, proposes sensible reforms, and

What's more, the analysis expands to examine additional aspects of the higher education market, such as dual enrollment, transfer
