This expression was used to indicate perfection, the highest standards and doesn't relate to clothing. That was in use in the 18th century, well before 'dressed to the nines' was first used, as in this example from William Hamilton's Epistle to Ramsay, 1719: The bonny Lines therein thou sent me, How to the nines they did content me.

'Dressed to the nines' - meaning and origin.

So in the end, "dressed to the nines" is most likely simply an offshoot of the previous "to the nines" expression, more or less meaning "perfect" or "to perfection." Where "to the nines" came from exactly is a bit of a mystery. The "Nine Muses" origin theory seems to have the strongest case. But that doesn't necessarily mean it's correct as the evidence is still scant.

Where The Expression "Dressed to the Nines" Came From

That's actually as much as we know for sure about the origin of to the nines: it uses the highest single-digit number as an expressive. Perhaps it has something to do with the fact that it sits high forward with the /n/ sounds and has that vowel closing on high front, as though the tongue is dancing eagerly on its tip.
